Survey: Help inform a public radio show about online education!

Posted by sbp1980 - 2012/08/02 18:20

Hello,

I work for a public radio show called American RadioWorks, from American Public Media (http://americanradioworks.org). We're conducting a survey to better understand people's experience with online education. Did you enjoy your time in online classes? What worked and what didn't? We would love to hear your thoughts.

Please take a minute to fill out the survey and your response might be part of a nationally-broadcast radio program this fall.

Hi Suzanne,

Thanks for the posting on the upcoming radio show.

Glad to help get the word out.

Will your show have a specific angle -- meaning K-12 or college level or continuing education or leisure learning. Do you need any particular type of voices or students?

All the best

Hi Vicky,

This will mostly focus on higher education. We're looking for a broad range of voices - students and instructors alike. The responses will mostly be used for our web site that will accompany the documentary. The doc airs this fall on public radio stations across the country and the web site will have additional relevant content.

Please forward the link widely! And I'd love suggestions for other places to post the survey.

Thanks so much,

Suzanne

Thanks for posting this, Suzanne.

There have been a lot of positive experiences from online learning (myself included), and I'm sure many people will be happy to share their stories!
